JOHN MILTON IN OUTER SPACE!
Lindall risks becoming everyone's enemy and getting shot to death. In thought he is avante garde. When he openly described himself as hermeneutic artist, he neutralized the would-be assassin (if there were any). The self-contradictory, absolute, Western value of postmodern cultural relativism he verbally denigrated saved him without losing his elitist niche in contemporary art history in New York, and beyond.

About The Gold Scroll

"Gold". I think you are rather overemphasizing the 24k gold leaf, because the real "gold" lies in the perceptions incorporated in the artist's concepts. This is the best since Blake and Doré." Nancy Charlton, Milton Lites [32]

"Thanks, Nancy, for your detailed and helpful interpretation of this impressive work." Dr. Salva Khoddam, Oklahoma City University [38]

"Terrance: Would that Milton had been as rich in writing about his great epic as you have been about everything you have written about your scroll and the inspiration for it. I don't mean to sell Milton short by any means because, like all great artists, somewhere in his writing can be found his own profound reasons for what he has done and why he did it. In this you stand side by side with the great bard in wanting your paintings to be appreciated and understood." Dr. Robert J. Wickenheiser, 19th President of St. Bonaventure University

"Thank You Terrance...I am grateful for all you are doing. It is an amazing project. You are creating a great legacy..." Professor John Geraghty [39][\[attribution needed\]](#)

...this is stunningly beautiful! There is so much to look at—both traditional and incredibly mysterious. It really makes me think of Blake's "Marriage of Heaven and Hell" as well as some of the Serbian iconography I've been looking at recently in the masterpieces of Franska Gorič. I visited the ancient monastery and chapel of Hopovo, and the brilliant colors of the figures crowding into the inner sanctum recall your powerful sunsets and energetic (yet static) figures." Professor Karen Karbiener, Department of English, New York University
